Lions Club Fills Vacancies Among Group Officers

BOB STEVENSON CHOSEN FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT; SINGING STAR HEARD

Robert Stevenson was elected first vice-president of the Ocean Beach Lions club at the meeting Thursday, Jan. 30, held at 7 p. m. in Glenn's Drive-In cafe. Because of some changes in the membership, the mid-year election was held to replace those officers who are no longer connected with the group. Other officers elected to fill vacancies were M. Stafford, Tail-Twister, and H. B. Hollobaugh and Mark Stevens, members of the board of directors. Nominations were made from the floor and election followed. The terms of the newly elected club officials will be the unexpired term of the officers they replaced.

Members of the club decided to contribute the sums collected by the Tail-Twister as fines during the month of January should be turned over to the March of Dimes campaign.

During the dinner the membership was entertained with selections to be heard in the coming Legion presentation "Dimouts of 1947" sung by the star of the show, Miss Margaret La Licate. Miss La Licate and her mother were guests of the club for the dinner meeting.

Local Plane Club Petitions City to Use Collier Park

REQUEST IS TO LAY OUT FLYING FIELD FOR MODEL PLANES OF THE MEMBERS

Ocean Beach Model Plane Flying club has entered a request with the City Park commission for use of Collier park by the club, a group of boys now totaling 25, Arthur Derrick, who with Ed Austin, is a leader in the club, reports.

The plans, as explained Thursday to The News by Derrick, call for the improvement of a plot near Montalvo and Camulos Sts. 400 feet wide by 500 feet long, and which is a "natural" for the purpose intended. The grounds are now in the rough, in a ravine, and with the city concentrating on development of the Mission bay recreation park, is not likely to be improved by the city for years to come, Derrick stated he has been informed.

Two flying circles, each about 160 feet in diameter, would be laid out and bleachers would be installed on the 20-foot sloping bank at the windward side of the field, according to the plans being made. Considerable work is needed to level the field, and this and all other improvements contemplated for putting the grounds in shape for the new use, would be done without expense either to the city or the taxpayers, Derrick stated.

Main use of the field would be for the boys practicing with their flying model airplanes and for the contests that will be a feature. The field, Derrick points

Kraft Introduces Measure in Senate On Right to Work

Senator Fred H. Kraft of Ocean Beach last week introduced a so-called "Right to Work" bill in the state senate at Sacramento which is expected to stir up considerable controversy, The News was advised this week. The measure prohibits anyone from requiring that an employee join a union in or to obtain or hold a job.

Prompted, Kraft said, by numerous complaints from war veterans in the San Diego area, the bill is somewhat similar to the "right-to-work" proposition that was included on the November 1944 ballot and which was defeated at that election. Explaining his new bill Senator Kraft says:

"I have found that many of these returned fighting men have claimed they have been unable to get jobs because they are not union members. They have found they would have to join a union before they could be hired.

"And they have found that some unions — the Electricians' union for one—will not accept them, thereby depriving them of the right to go to work."

Nothing in the bill "shall be construed to interfere with collective bargaining, subject to prohibitions contained in this code, nor to prohibit any employee voluntarily becoming or remaining a member of a labor organization."

The bill also provides that "any person injured, or threatened with injury, by violation of any of the provisions of the preceding section, shall be entitled to injunctive relief therefrom in a proper case and to recover any damages resulting therefrom in any court of competent jurisdiction."

Point Loma Wins Casaba Game from La Jolla, 36 to 20

The Pointers made their second place standing in the Metro basketball league more secure the afternoon of January 30 by trouncing the La Jolla High basketeers on the San Diego floor by a score of 36 to 20. Don Larsen, top scorer for the league, again was hitting the baskets with unerring accuracy and rolled up a total of 21 points.

Other Pointers who scored were Kaneyuki 8, Medina 3, Pastore 2 and Silva and Stangl each one point.

In the Class B game, La Jolla won by a score of 45 to 22.

Results in Other Games

In other Metro league games played last week-end, Grossmont walloped Oceanside 31 to 21, Coronado beat Sweetwater 36 to 27 and Kearny defeated Escondido 37 to 23.

Play Coronado Tonight

This week's big game for the Pointers will be played with Coronado High on the latter's floor tonight (Friday), the Class B curtain raiser to start at 7 o'clock.

Incidentally tonight's game will be the last for Don Larsen, star basket tosser. Though he does not graduate until next June, at the end of this first semester he will have played the limit of the period allotted to high school athletes and will therefore be ineligible to compete in the remaining games of the Pointers schedule, Coach Don Clarkson reported Thursday.

With Larsen out of the lineup, Coach Clarkson plans to use Correia and Pastore at the forwards, and continue Kaneyuki at center and Medina and Silva at the guards, as the first team.

Request to Be Made for Paving Of Santa Barbara

Interested property owners in that section of Ocean Beach are preparing to enter a request with the city to have Santa Barbara St. paved. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Young of 4405 Narragansett Ave., in conversation with other property owners, report they have found a strong sentiment in favor of such paving.

A request for the necessary petition blanks has gone in to Civic center and as soon as the blanks arrive, the plan is to obtain the signatures needed, and in that way make formal request for the improvement.

Santa Barbara is one of the few of the important resident streets that is still "in the dirt" for a distance of about six blocks. The residents interested report that this street is now used sufficently to justify the improvement to be asked for.

MEET YOUR OCEAN BEACH NEIGHBORS

(Editor's note: The following is the first of a series of brief biographical sketches of the business and professional men and women of Ocean Beach. The purpose of this series is to help our readers to become better acquainted with the men and women who serve them in the business, professional and civic activities of this community. Insofar as possible we will present our biographical subjects in an alphabetical order. However, because all of these men and women may not have photographic cuts of themselves available at present, we will have to start out with those we have on hand. Since we already have cuts of most of the officers of the various civic organizations, we will begin with them. All other business and professional people of Ocean Beach are urged to provide photographs of themselves to the News business office so that we may have cuts made as soon as possible.)

Henry Holman, president of the Ocean Beach Kiwanis club, and local meat market owner, was born on June 9, 1906, in Madison, Wis., where he attended grade school and high school. He studied radio engineering at college in Valparaiso, Ind., following his graduation from high school. In 1930 he accepted the position of service manager for the R. C. A. distributor for the state of Wisconsin with headquarters in Milwaukee. It was in Milwaukee, too, that he and Carryl Herreman were married in 1931. They lived there until 1938 when they moved to Ocean Beach.

Henry and his father-in-law, O. F. Herreman were partners as owners of the meat department of the Market Basket grocery store until 1946 when Henry bought his father-in-law's interest and is now the sole owner. Henry and Carryl have two children, Nancy, 10, and Roger, 2. They purchased a new home recently at 4840 Saratoga Ave. which is convenient in its location since it is close to Henry's work and the Ocean Beach Elementary school, which Nancy attends.

Besides holding the position of president of the Kiwanis club and belonging to the Chamber of Commerce he finds time to keep up with all the latest developments in radio engineering as well as to sandwich in a little garden work at his home now and then.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I: Spratt Herlong was a major producer of motion pictures. He called Elizabeth, his wife, to join him at lunch. Elizabeth knew that something was not going right at the studio and that her husband desired her presence, more to talk to her than to receive any real assistance.

CHAPTER II: At the start of World War I, Elizabeth had married. Her husband soon sailed for France and later was reported killed in action. Spratt was her second husband. This memory always returned when she thought of Dick going to war.

CHAPTER III: Spratt phones Elizabeth that he is bringing Kessler, one of his new writers, for dinner the following night. Kessler, a German refugee who had been injured in the first war, was, unknown to the Herlongs, Elizabeth's first husband.

CHAPTER IV: Elizabeth had been orphaned as a baby and raised by her aunt and uncle in Tulsa. She had been sent away to college, but during one summer vacation she went out to the country club to swim. There she had met Arthur Kittredge.

CHAPTER V: Elizabeth and Arthur had many dates the following days—swimming, dancing and hiking. They found that they were meant for each other, and despite all objections were married. Then the United States entered the war, and Arthur enlisted. After less than a year of married life, Arthur was off to the war. Then came the wire that Arthur was killed in action.

CHAPTER IX: Spratt was delayed for dinner. Cherry and Dick had invited Julia and Pudge, and were anxious to be off on a date. Elizabeth informed them that Kessler and his daughter would be there for dinner the following night and that Dick would have to entertain Kessler's daughter after dinner.

CHAPTER X: Arthur had not died. Seriously wounded and disfigured, he was taken in hand by Dr. Jacoby. He assumed the name of Kessler, and let the world believe that Arthur Kittredge was dead.

CHAPTER XI: At first Arthur, or Kessler, had no desire to live. His hatred for Dr. Jacoby soon, however, turned to respect. He found work helping the doctor, and as his body was mended, his spirits began to return.

CHAPTER XII: Dr. Jacoby reached an agreement with Arthur, that in return for his cooperating in trying to live, Dr. Jacoby would see that Arthur Kittredge was reported officially dead.

eyebrows and crinkles of kindness at the outer corners, and a pleasant smile—what she could see of it between the whiskers—a very pleasant smile indeed. If he had any idea that this was not their first meeting he gave no evidence of it, for all he said to her was, "How do you do, Mrs. Herlong," with the stateliness she had learned to expect from Europeans. Elizabeth indicated the room beyond.

"Come in by the fire, Mr. Kessler. These are my children."

Dick was standing, with that mixture of assurance and awkwardness that made her find boys in their teens so eminently kissable just when they most resisted being kissed by their mothers. Cherry, with fewer years but more social graces than Dick would acquire for another decade, sat smiling a welcome to the newcomer. Elizabeth introduced them, and again it seemed to her that Kessler was regarding them with an attention extraordinary in a man who could hardly be supposed to have any interest in them. There was an alertness in the way he spoke to Dick and Cherry, as though he had decided in advance that he was going to be fond of them and hoped they would respond. He said, "Your father has told me a great deal about you, and has shown me your pictures. I am glad to see you."

Dick, who had already said "How do you do," tried to look pleasant without knowing what else to say, while Cherry, a shade too adept at social fibs, answered, "He has told us lots about you too, Mr. Kessler," with such a bright smile that Elizabeth privately reminded herself, "I've got to warn Cherry about that sort of thing, if she isn't careful she's going to be an intolerable gusher before she's twenty." Kessler appeared to be finding them the most attractive youngsters on earth. While she was offering him the chair she had intended for him, arranged with a little table at its side so he could set down his glass when the hors d'oeuvres appeared, she added to herself, "Spratt must have led him to expect a most remarkable pair of children, he really shouldn't—or is Mr. Kessler as charming as this with everybody?" Spratt, evidently pleased at the good impression his offspring were making, crossed the room to the door leading upstairs, explaining that Kessler had had time to wash up in his bungalow before leaving the lot, but he himself had not, and if they'd forgive him he'd go up and make himself presentable. "I'll leave you with the family, Kessler," he concluded.

Kessler gave him a smile and a slight formal bow. Elizabeth returned to the fire. "Now we'll have a cocktail. Dick, will you bartend?"

Dick would; he was always glad of this to occupy him during his first minutes of encounter with a stranger. Everything became quite as usual. Dick mixed the Martinis, and as the war had reduced the number of their servants Cherry brought in the hors d'oeuvres. "These are liver-paste, Mr. Kessler, and these are smoked salmon, and these thingumbobs on toothpicks—I don't know what they are, something she made out of an old lampshade." But as Elizabeth and Kessler picked up their glasses and their eyes met across them, she felt another twinge of familiarity. "I have met this man before, I know I have, and he knows it too. Or doesn't he? If he doesn't, why is he looking at me like that? Maybe it's just because I keep looking at him—for pity's sake, I do believe I'm staring. Behave yourself, Elizabeth." She was relieved to hear Cherry say,

CHAPTER XIV

"Have you ever been to the United States before, Mr. Kessler?"

He turned to her at once, and Elizabeth thought, "He's as relieved as I am to have that look between us broken, or if he's not, then I'm letting my imagination go haywire." He was answering Cherry,

"Yes, Miss Herlong, but that was many years ago, long before this country was brightened by your existence."

"Say, that's very good!" Dick exclaimed with a grin.

Elizabeth flashed him a teasing glance. "You will, Oscar." They all laughed, and Dick said to Kessler,

"You speak awfully well for a man who's just been here once, and that so long ago."

"It has been three years since I left Germany. Besides, I have visited England and Scotland. We have more chance to practice foreign languages in Europe than you have here."

"Oh yes, of course you do," said Cherry. "We don't have any. We take French, and learn to say 'Have you seen the garden of my grandmother's cousin?' and then school is out for the summer and we forget it. At least, I always did."

"Haven't you three children, Mrs. Herlong?"

"Why yes," said Elizabeth, "but Brian is only eleven, so he had his dinner early." But she could not help asking, "How did you know there were three?"

"Mr. Herlong told me, and showed me a picture of you all. Brian isn't asleep yet, is he?"

"I'm sure he isn't. Do you want to meet him too?"

"I should like to very much, if it's quite convenient."

Elizabeth laughed a little. "Mr. Kessler, you should know it's never inconvenient for a mother to display her jewels. Dick, will you run up and get Brian?"

"Sure, but you'd better warn Mr. Kessler that he'll be all smeared with glue and bugs. Brian's mounting butterflies, does it all day and night, and he'll talk your ear off about them if you let him."

"I should like that. Tell him to bring his specimens down and show them to me."

"There are thousands," Cherry warned, but Kessler showed no dismay. He only said,

"Then tell him to bring a few, and don't make him brush his hair, or he'll dislike me before he sees me." He and Dick exchanged a look of understanding. As Dick went out Kessler turned to Elizabeth. "I hope I'm not upsetting a domestic arrangement, Mrs. Herlong, in asking that he come in. But your two older children are so entertaining that I couldn't help wanting to see the other."

"Aren't you nice!" exclaimed Cherry.

"Thank you for saying so," answered Elizabeth. "Of course, their father and I think they are, but we love having other people agree with us."

"I'm sure other people do. You should be very proud, Mrs. Herlong." He glanced around him. "When one sees a home like this, one knows who is responsible for it. I don't mean the physical furnishings of your house, attractive as they are—I mean its atmosphere. It's not by chance one achieves such confidence and vitality."

He spoke sincerely, obviously meaning what he said. Elizabeth felt a glow of pleasure. It was like what she had felt when she sat on the balcony yesterday afternoon, before she heard the children talking in the den. She wondered what Kessler would say of them now if he had heard that conversation.

She said, "I hardly know how to answer such a compliment, Mr. Kessler. Has it occurred to you that perhaps we have too much confidence, a good deal more than is justified by the world we live in?"

"Oh yes," he replied instantly. "That's true of nearly all Americans—at least, it seems true to anyone who comes to the United States from Europe. But surely," he added smiling, "you can't hold yourself guilty when a man long surrounded by terror comes into your home and feels encouraged at the thought that this, and not the other, is the normal state of living?"

His words made her feel better than she had felt all day. Now that the two of them seemed to be back on a normal basis from which a friendship could be started, it occurred to Elizabeth that perhaps Kessler, fresh from Nazi Germany but evidently not part of it, could tell Dick more clearly than she ever could something about the issues at stake in this war he was going to be asked to fight. Much as she loved Dick she could not disguise from herself the fact that he was more superficial than she would have liked him to be, so occupied with girls and football that he was glad to accept cliches that relieved him from being occupied with more troublesome matters. Dick was a nice boy, but mentally he was a rather lazy one, and neither she nor his father was quite capable of coping with him. Spratt was inclined to believe he would begin to take life seriously when the time came; Elizabeth thought the time had come for it. Sometimes it happened that a friend was better at this than the parents who had spent so many years being more indulgent than they should have been, or who at least had emphasized details of socially acceptable behavior at the expense of the much harder job of making a boy think for himself.

Her thoughts were interrupted by the opening of the door from the hall. Spratt and Dick came in with Brian, who had a glass-topped box of specimens under his arm. "This is Mr. Kessler, Brian," Spratt said. "He wanted to meet you so he could know the whole Herlong family."

"How do you do sir," said Brian, all in one word, and held out his hand. Fortunately Kessler was sitting down instead of leaning on his cane, and so could give him a handshake. Brian stood uncertainly, one foot curled around the opposite ankle.

"Your brother tells me you are interested in natural history," said Kessler, "and I asked him to tell you I should like to see some of your specimens. Is that what's in the case?"

Brian nodded. "Butterflies. Want to see them?"

"Look out," warned Dick, and Cherry said simultaneously, "You don't know what you're getting into, Mr. Kessler." Paying no attention to them, their guest already had his head close to Brian's as they bent over the butterflies together. Dick poured a cocktail for his father, and saying, "You'll need another one too, Mr. Kessler, if you let him get started," he refilled Kessler's glass. Kessler appeared to be deeply interested in Brian's butterflies. Brian was chattering.

". . . that blue one is easy to get, they're everywhere except where it's too cold for them. The name is Lamp—Lampides something, I forget, but I've got it written in my notebook. This is a monarch butterfly, they fly north in the summertime like birds. The copper and black one, you've seen thousands like it, it's a viceroy."

Spratt sat down by Elizabeth. "Good fellow, isn't he?" he said under cover of the other dialogue.

"Yes indeed. But we mustn't let Brian wear him out."

"I think he likes it," said Spratt. "One of these men who's interested in everything."

Elizabeth glanced at Kessler, almost ready to believe that her impression of self-consciousness on his part had been mistaken. Certainly their exchange of remarks before Brian's entrance had not suggested it. When the maid came in to announce dinner neither Kessler nor Brian heard her. They were deep in conversation, Brian sitting on the floor with his case in his hands, this time listening instead of talking.

Ocean Beach Club Women Respond to Philippines Need

By MARIAN KRETTLER

Since the club women of the Philippines belong to our general federation, their desperate need for materials and garments suitable for use in the tropics is being met here in sisterly fashion.

"White gifts" brought to the December party of the Ocean Beach Woman's club, totalled handsomely. Seventy-four articles of clothing, 18 pieces of material, three suits for men, five pair of scissors and a box of needed sewing notions were carefully boxed for shipment.

A friend of Mrs. Lloyd Davis, the club president, took the gifts to Los Angeles where they were placed with Mrs. Vicente Lim, former president of a Philippine organization. They are now supposedly on the high seas, since they were to be shipped January 26.

Last week's club party for the benefit of the island women resulted in a donation of $50, which will be used for further sewing necessities.

Notable among the gifts were three suits, made for a local Naval officer, then on duty in the tropics. Two suits are of heavy pongee, the third of excellent off-white linen. Since great need exists among the male Philippine population, it is suggested that other lightweight uniforms no longer usable, be brought to the same good cause.

Scissors, needles, thread, tape, thimbles are practically unobtainable in the Philippines, and will be gladly received and sent on by officials of the local woman's club.

A report from Germany says that 13 American translators arrived there recently from the United States and were then given tests to determine their qualifications for the jobs. All failed.

"Well, it was a nice trip, anyway," one of them is said to have remarked. Yes, indeed—at the taxpayers' expense.

GEORGIA "PEACH"?

The Georgia "putsch" which put Herman Talmadge in the governor's chair, at least temporarily, may eventually do his political career more harm than good. Herman is finding that the governor's chair is really a hot seat which is getting hotter as public indignation and protest increase. On the other hand, the man whom Talmadge so unceremoniously displaced—former Governor Ellis Arnall—has greatly benefited by the national prominence he has gained in his fight against the Talmadge maneuver. Arnall is now being widely discussed as a possible Democratic presidential nominee in 1952. There is also the possibility that he might be paired with Harry Truman in 1948. The 39-year-old Georgian is recognized as one of the most progressive Southern leaders to appear in many years. He is the direct antithesis of the Bilbo-Rankin-Talmadge type of fire-eating, Negro-hating demagogue. He would strongly appeal to Northern Democrats and to many independent voters. The Democrats will do well not to forget him—and so will the Republicans.

WHERE HAVE THEY GONE?

With butter prices now reaching levels below the former OPA ceilings this might be a good time to speculate on what has become of those professional calamity howlers who once made a career out of OPA jobs and made a practice of sending out dire warnings of the "chaos" that would surely result if price ceilings were removed.

Well, the butter ceilings and the calamity howlers have been missing now for some time—and we seem to be getting along very nicely without them both. Anyway we've been getting more butter than we ever did under artificial controls, and although the price has been high the good old law of supply and demand (remember?) is gradually bringing it down to a more popular level.

This performance must be a cruel blow to those "Calamity Johns" wherever they may be secluding themselves now. And, worst of all—to them, it appears that the country will work out of its difficulties without recalling them to Washington to save the situation.

Too bad.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

The march of time consigns most men to historical oblivion.

Not so with Abraham Lincoln. Instead of his life and work growing more obscure as one year after another widens the gap between his day and ours, they acquire increased recognition for their excellence of quality and their value to this Nation and to humanity.

Today Lincoln stands on the horizon of history as one of the most compelling figures who ever trod this planet. He symbolizes the principles upon which America is built—the equality of all men; the indivisibility of the Union; the opportunity for the lowliest of birth to achieve the highest of honors; ardent support of the right, firm resistance to the wrong, but with patience and tolerance to those who sincerely hold differing views.

It was Lincoln's earthliness, his humility, his gentle humor, his ability to maintain the common touch while dealing with uncommon problems—these were the things which endeared him to the masses of his time. These are the things that still endear him to the masses of our day. He was a great man in great things, but he was also great in little things.

On this 138th anniversary of his birth the people of America pay tribute to his greatness and rededicate themselves to the ideals and principles whose cause he so courageously championed, and so notably advanced.

E. J. Olsen of Los Angeles was a guest at the home of his sister Mrs. Earl J. Haas at 4732 Muir Ave. last week. Mr. Olsen was a resident of Ocean Beach 15 years ago and while he was visiting his sister he expressed amazement at the community's growth and progress.

A new Arts and Crafts class, under the direction of Thelma Underhill, teacher at the San Diego School of Arts and Crafts, will be in session every Friday afternoon from 1 to 4:30 p.m. beginning today (Friday). Those interested are asked to phone reservations to B-4079.

Screams for help coming from a nearby house caused a passing pedestrian to rush to the open door and offer his services. A frantic mother explained that her son had just swallowed a quarter. The stranger grabbed the child by the feet, lifted him into the air and shook him vigorously. Presently the quarter dropped out of the child's mouth. The mother was profuse in her thanks.

"How fortunate it was for us, Doctor, that you happened by at just this moment. You certainly knew how to get it out of him."

"But, my dear lady," replied the stranger, "I'm not a doctor. I'm with the Internal Revenue Department."

Uncle Sam Says

You have heard people say, "why save at a time when prices are going up?" We cannot all be economists; and it is perhaps just as well, for they seem to differ a great deal among themselves about the future. But we all know this: A man who saved a dollar 10 years ago is better off today than the man who didn't; and other things being equal, the man who saves a dollar today will be better off in 1957 than the man who doesn't.

United States Savings Bonds offer you the opportunity to save at a profit. Thus every $3 you lay away now will come back to you in 1957 with an extra dollar in interest. You don't have to be an economist to know a good thing when you see it.
